the same stripes that the other one does. They are black and white, just like my animal book at home."

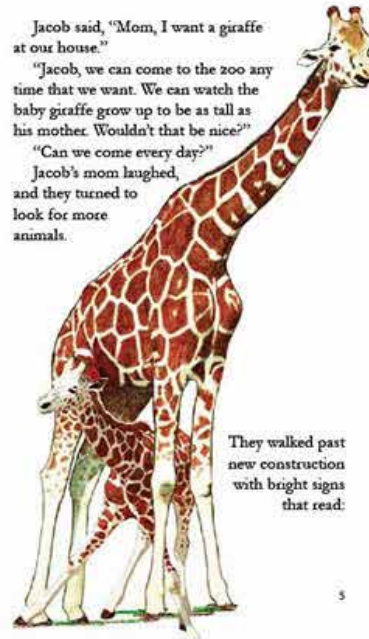

"Yes, Jacob, you're right. Let's go to the giraffes and see the newest baby in the zoo."

Jacob pulled his mom along the path. They walked up to the exhibit fence. Just over the rock wall was a baby giraffe and his mother.

"Mom, look at the little baby. He's so cute." The tiny giraffe walked closer to the wall and stretched his neck just to the top of it. He stuck out his long, pink tongue, and Jacob laughed. The baby ran back to his mother and crawled under her belly.

Jacob said, "Mom, I want a giraffe at our house."

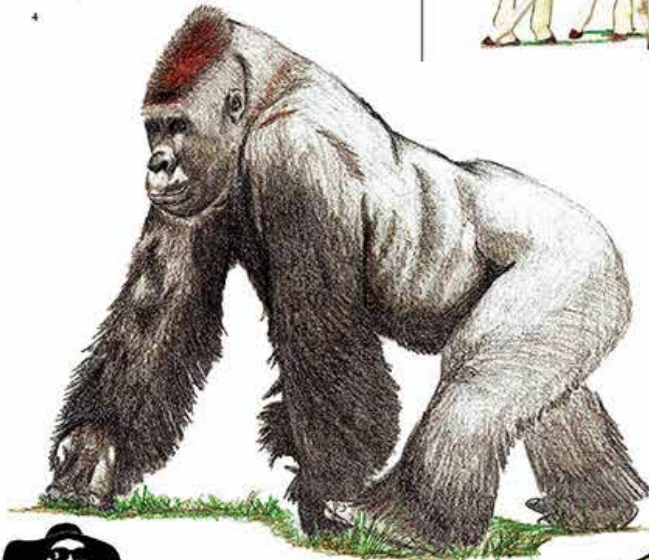

"Jacob, we can come to the zoo any time that we want. We can watch the baby giraffe grow up to be as tall as his mother. Wouldn't that be nice?"

"Can we come every day?"

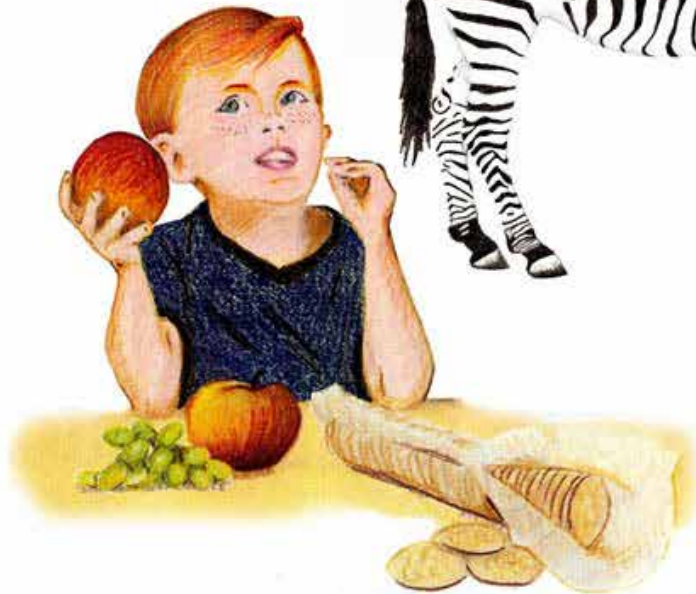

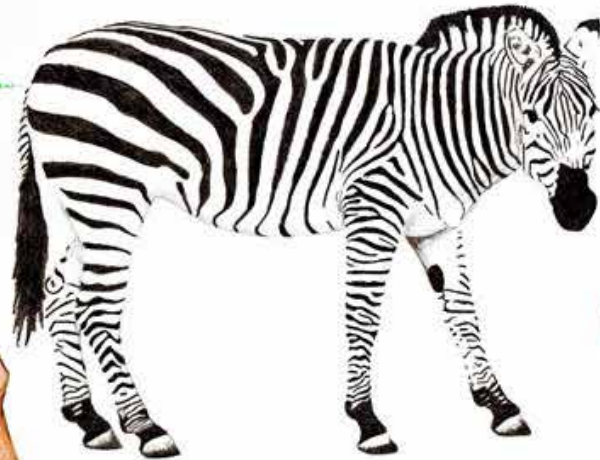

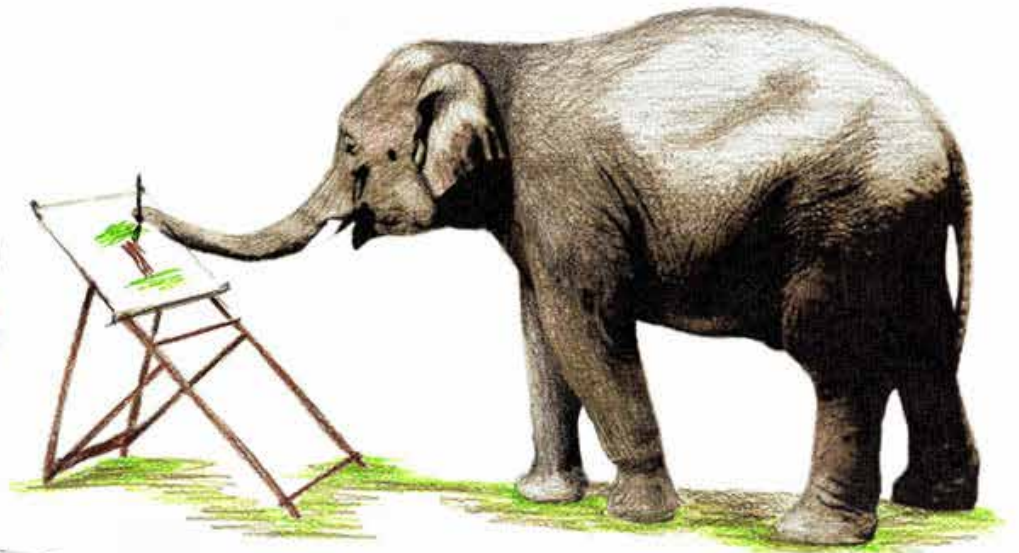

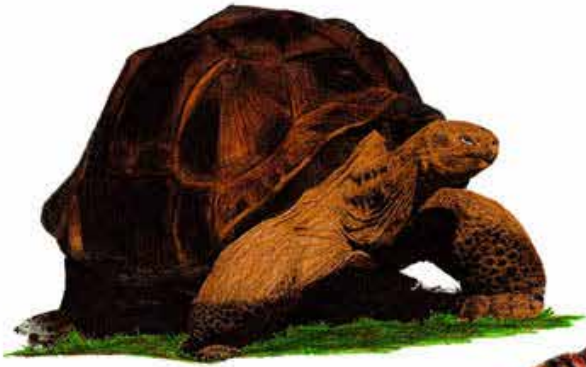

Jacob's mom laughed, and they turned to look for more animals.

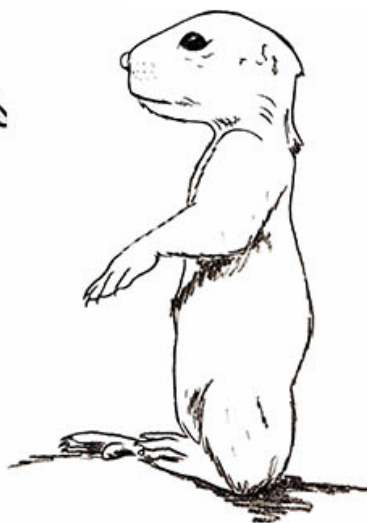

They walked past new construction with bright signs that read:
